PREFACE.

It is now generally admitted by those whose experience enables them best to judge upon the subject, that there is no great reason to anticipate the discovery of any extensive or important collection of Records or Historical Documents in Scotland. The external and internal commotions to which that Kingdom has been so frequently exposed in days of yore, and the zeal and activity with which its repositories have been investigated of late, make this conclusion a matter almost approximating to certainty. The contents of the Register Office and of the Advocates' Library are well known to all interested in antiquarian and historical pursuits; and there remains no mass of unexplored or unsorted documents, amongst which the discovery of hidden treasures may be anticipated.

But it is not so with the Libraries and Record Offices of England. They present a sufficient degree of vagueness to stimulate inquiry;—and, judging by the results of such investigations already before the public,—a sufficient prospect of that investigation being attended with ample success. The Tower, the Chapter-House, the Exchequer Offices, the State Paper Office, the British Museum, the Bodleian Library, the different Collegiate Libraries in the two Universities, and the Public Library at Cambridge, &c., all abound in materials as yet imperfectly known, and inadequately examined.

Difficulties attend the examination of some of these Collections, however, and, even in those which are most freely opened to the inquirer, he will frequently be deterred from a satisfactory examination. The wide extent of the Collection, the absence of catalogues, or, if they exist, of a classification, the difficulty of decyphering the characters in which the documents are written, and of deciding whether they contain matter which is really useful or curious, all conspire to make the investigation one of time and difficulty.

To remove some of these impediments is the object of the present volume. It lays before the inspection of those most interested in the inquiry, information respecting the contents of some Collections of Records neither generally known nor easy of access. It professes to bring before their notice a mass of highly valuable records, of which the existence is known only to a few; and it points out to them a source whence they may derive abundant materials for subsequent publication.

The reader will observe, that by far the greatest portion of the present volume is occupied with a Catalogue of certain records connected with the History of Scotland, which are at present preserved in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office. Many circumstances tend to make these documents highly interesting. They relate to one of the most busy and important periods of Scottish history, the period when that kingdom was overrun by King Edward the First of England. It is obvious that Scotland cannot furnish many new materials for a history of this period; if, indeed, any yet remain unexamined. Of the English Records, the most important are the Rotuli Scotiæ. They form, indeed, the great storehouse, whence is derived almost all the information which can add to, or correct, or confirm the narratives of the Historians who lived at the period. But if we turn to the Rotuli Scotiæ, we shall find that they are sadly defective towards the end of the reign of Edward the First. For example, the 26th and 27th years of his reign contain nothing but letters of protection and letters of attorney,* leaving us in total ignorance of the great transactions which were then passing. There are no Rolls for the 28th

* These two years occupy scarce a page in the printed edition, (i. 51,) and their contents are thus described by the Editor of that publication:—

"In toto rotulo de duobus annis, novem membranas densissime scriptas, et plerasque utrinque, continente, nihil aliud est quam literæ de protectione, attornatu, et respectibus debitorum, pro hominibus regis Edwardi, ex tota Anglia vocatis, et in Scotia morantibus, vel in Scotiam proficiscentibus, quæ nihil prosunt ad historiam. In numero ingente nominum inveniuntur sequentia virorum præcipuorum, ex illis, qui in utroque regno terras habueruut."

and 29th regnal years ;* the 30th, 31st, and 32d, are of the same barren character as the preceding ones to which we have alluded,† and of the Rolls for the remaining years of that monarch's reign, not one has come down to us,‡ if, indeed, they ever existed.

It appears, then, from what has been stated, that the Rotuli Scotiæ may be said to terminate with A.D. 1297, leaving a blank of about ten years before the series is resumed.

To supply that blank we must turn to the documents contained in the Queen's Remembrancer's Office, as indicated by the present Catalogue. That series takes up the information nearly at the point where we are deserted by the Scottish Rolls, and guides us to more than one hundred and fifty contemporary and official Records of undisputed genuineness and authenticity, illustrating the annals of Scotland, during that most important period of her history. By them, among other particulars, we may trace the progress of the English arms, the number of soldiers appointed for the defence of the garrisons in their possession, the quantity of victuals consumed, and the expense with which the campaign was attended. Hence are to be gathered many local facts, for which we should probably search in vain elsewhere. A few of the places whose history might be illustrated from this quarter may be quoted; such as Aberdeen, Ayr, Berwick, Bothwell, Brechin, Cambuskenneth, Carlaverock, Cumnock, Dumfries, Dunfermline, Edinburgh, Glasgow, &c., &c. For the remainder, the reader is referred to the Index.

The second portion of the volume contains a Catalogue of an interesting Manuscript Collection of Original Letters and Papers respecting Scottish affairs during the reign of Henry the Eighth of England. It is preserved in the Chapter-House at Westminster.

Little need be said as to the manner in which the ensuing notices have been drawn up. The compiler's wish has been to unite clearness of description with brevity; to give, at the same time, an idea of the general contents of the document, and to preserve sufficient individuality of description as may suffice for the easy identification of the particular Record. To attain that end the more effectually, it has been thought expedient to preserve, in almost every instance, the title by which the document describes itself; whether that title be prefixed to the Record by its original scribe, or be derived from its contents at a subsequent period.

With these few introductory remarks, the compiler leaves the ensuing pages in the hands of the Reader.
